DLA Packaging Requirements

Contract Packaging, Internal Capabilities & Supplier Support

DLA Packaging Requirements

The Defense Logistics Agency (DLA) requires supplies to be preserved, packed, and marked in accordance with the applicable contract. Section B, incorporated packaging requirements, and special packaging instructions define the measures required to protect each item and prepare it for shipment and storage. [1]

Preservation and packing. When specified by the contract, MIL-STD-2073-1 establishes military packaging requirements, including preservation methods and packaging materials. ASTM D3951 applies to commercial packaging when authorized by the contract. The requirements for each item govern the packaging approach. [1]

Identification and marking. MIL-STD-129 establishes military marking requirements for shipment and storage. Required identification, barcodes, and additional contract-specific markings must be applied at the appropriate packaging levels. [2]

Wilson Company Internal Packaging Services

Wilson Company provides packaging services internally across all of its contracts as an integral part of contract fulfillment. This capability supports direct coordination of packaging activities with the requirements of each award, from product protection and identification through preparation for delivery. Maintaining this service internally supports continuity between order fulfillment, packaging, and shipment preparation.

TMT Packaging Supply Support

TMT Packaging supports Wilson Company by supplying the materials used in its internal packaging operations. TMT Packaging has provided timely delivery of these supplies, helping maintain material availability and supporting scheduled packaging activities. This supplier relationship contributes to operational continuity and supports Wilson Company in preparing shipments to meet contractual delivery requirements.

References: [1] DLA Packaging: contract requirements and packaging standards. [2] ASSIST: MIL-STD-129.

Company capabilities and supplier performance statements reflect information provided by Wilson Company. Applicable contract requirements govern all packaging and marking obligations.